Another Successful Year For Mac

And fittingly so, because developing software for its massive mobile iOS platform requires a Mac. They will start using it and conclude they no longer need to use anything else, other than their phones. However, Apple hasn't been actively pushing Macs at Windows users lately. The truth hurts PC feelings. Instead, in 2015 Apple's chief executive Tim Cook yanked out the tablecloth of accepted expectations when he rhetorically asked in an interview, "I think if you're looking at a PC, why would you buy a PC anymore? No really, why would you buy one?" He upset many PC pundits by simply explaining what was happening in the industry: "iPad Pro is a replacement for a notebook or a desktop for many, many people." Letter from the Director We're proud to report that once again in 2017, the high-quality drinking water. Three weeks after Apple's software chief Craig Federighi first showed off macOS 10. A few years later, Apple's "Tim a Mac" campaign similarly invited PC users to switch and enjoy working where things were so much easier. Celtic Colours is done and gone for another year. It was another success with all but a few shows sold out. Apple's macOS Mojave is still a work in progress, but the strategy is clear: Welcome to the Mac for iOS users. Mojave features a Dark Mode, Stacks for organizing the Desktop, a Finder Gallery view with full metadata and common editing tools, Markup (a Quick Look view), new apps including News, and lots of other iOS-familiar features. The Mojave release offers a clear look inside Apple's strategic thinking and the state of the art in 2018—both in what it aspires to deliver and what it doesn't even make an attempt to do.
